

Bolivia Sets Its Sights Higher.

Bolivia is an example of a global South country that increased its climate ambition by expanding its Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs) related to agriculture, water security, comprehensive forest management, and energy, with concrete goals and indicators to measure progress.

Fundación Avina, along with the Bolivian environmental agency, the Plurinational Authority on Mother Earth, compiled specialized reports and offered key technical input during the NDC revision and goal-setting process. The new NDC commits Bolivia to strengthen multi-level and multi-sector water security by establishing targets to ensure the health of watersheds throughout the country, adapting them to shifting climate conditions, creating stronger protections, and restoring water sources and replenishment areas.

The country made more ambitious commitments to comprehensive forest management geared toward conservation, sustainable use, environmental services, and expanding forest cover. Bolivia's increased climate ambition has indirectly impacted 11.6 million people.
